Why School Trips Matter for Your Child

Hello families,

It’s been a little while since I last wrote to you. Some of you may know that I recently went on a residential trip with a small group of children. We were very lucky to get funding that allowed us to travel to Spain and learn about how to look after our world. It was an amazing experience—and a good reminder of why trips and visits are so important.

At Templars, we are very proud of the trips and visitors we bring to school. We believe that all children should have as many experiences as possible to help them learn and grow. That’s why we carefully plan trips that widen their view of the world step by step as they move through school. The trips we choose are linked to what your child is learning in class. They also help children understand our country’s history and the many different cultures that make up modern Britain.

We believe every child should get the chance to:

- Visit a farm and see where food comes from
- Go to the zoo and learn about animals
- See the sea and play in the sand
- Explore a castle or a big house full of history
- Watch a show at the theatre
- Experience a pantomime
- Enjoy a meal in a restaurant
- Meet people who inspire them or show them new ways of thinking

We also invite visitors to school—like the emergency services, our local MP and magistrates—so children can ask questions and learn about the world around them in a safe and friendly way.

But trips are about more than what children see. They also teach life skills:

- How to be independent

- How to look after their things
- How to cope with being tired or travel sick
- How to bounce back and keep going

Trips also give teachers and adults a chance to see children in a new light—laughing, exploring, being brave—and that helps us support them better in school.

Thank you, as always, for supporting what we do. Every trip your child goes on helps build memories, confidence, and a stronger future.

A reminder from Sgt Kim Keating (schools' team)

Schools have a behaviour policy for adults coming onto school site, and the vast majority will be unaware of this or why it is in place thankfully.

However, incidents that happen outside of school and in local communities will sometimes be brought into a school playground in front of young children, exposing them to language and behaviour they should never understand. It can be a very frightening experience for them. This behaviour is totally unacceptable and if matters play out in a school setting the police will take action against those involved. Any tensions or incidents outside of school should be reported to officers using 101 or 999 and it can be dealt with appropriately.

If an incident should happen in the playground, and if the School Headteacher has already spoken to a parent before about behaviour on site, then my staff have opened up the following options to them.

The first step will be a Community Protection Warning that can in effect ban anyone from the school site and put restrictions on their involvement with the school, and this will last for 3 months. This will affect who can and can't drop or collect children from school and put strain on your arrangements.

If this is unheeded and behaviour continues and the Community Protection Warning (CPW) is breached, it will result in a Community Protection Notice being issued, this carries a power of arrest, and you will be sent to Magistrates Court where a fine or community sentence will be passed. This will be enforced and it will be followed up. Any mistreatment of school staff or other students for whatever reason will not be tolerated.

I would also remind you that verbal and physical abuse can also be prosecuted by other legal options.

Respect and fairness to school staff and the school environment is essential.

This will hopefully be a last resort in most cases, but if you persist and continue any behaviour in school over a period of time that affects the learning of students, or workplace safety and comfort of staff, we will take action.
